Since being established in 1927, members of the Department of Radiology have committed themselves to the advancement of human health through innovation in imaging and image-guided therapies. These efforts have made an enormous impact on patient care, research, and education in the fields of diagnostic and interventional radiology.

The department’s setting within a top-tier university and the nation’s first School of Medicine and Public Health is key to success. Department faculty and staff span 12 subspecialty clinical care and research sections. Department faculty develop innovative imaging technology through basic and translational research in collaboration with colleagues at UW–Madison and beyond. Researchers benefit from access to state-of-the-art technology and facilities. Translational and clinical researchers also engage in partnerships and productive collaborations with industry leaders.

The department’s training programs aim to develop leaders who will advance the practice of radiology throughout their careers. Department faculty work with residents and fellows to continually improve the learning experience and deepen teaching skills. The department offers four residency training programs and subspecialty training through nine fellowship programs. Radiology also has a strong presence throughout the medical student curriculum, with longitudinal integration and dedicated teaching in anatomy labs, case-based seminars, and clinical rotations.

The successful candidate will maintain the department’s status as a leader in radiology by pushing forward its mission to provide strong medical training, pursue cutting-edge research, combat health disparities in Wisconsin and beyond, and improve human health.

Applicants must have an MD, MD/PhD, DO or equivalent degree(s); board certification in diagnostic radiology; eligibility for a Wisconsin Physician license; have a substantial record of achievement in administrative leadership, clinical care, teaching across the full continuum of learners; and a strong academic background that would qualify for appointment as a tenured professor at the University of Wisconsin–Madison.
